Organic Versus Conventional Foods
Presenter: Raymond Palko, MS, RD, CSO

There are many factors to consider when choosing between organic and conventional foods. To help you make the best choices we will define organic and review research on the subject. With this information, you will be able to consider how choosing organic or conventional foods fits into evidence based guidelines for nutrition for healthy cancer survivorship and prevention.

Presenter: George Sledge, Jr. MD

Advanced breast cancer remains a serious disease, with ~40,000 American women dying of the disease every year. But it is also a disease where real progress has been made through improved understanding of the biology of breast cancer. Much of this improved knowledge comes from the realization that breast cancer is not just one disease, but many, each deserving of independent study and a focused approach. We will explain the new biology of breast cancer, and where current research is leading in terms of new therapies.
